Has been an English Language teacher for more than 24 years working in schools, FE colleges and HE in the UK and in the MENA region. She has worked alongside fellow teachers and teacher leaders to support learning in a range of pre-service and in-service contexts. She has extensive experience as a researcher in the field of embedding technology into the teaching and educational leadership projects in national (UK) and international contexts.

Her research interest are in the field of educational technology, teacher training and educational leadership mainly in contexts undergoing educational changes. She is also interested in research looking at what pedagogical frameworks in need to help in assessing learning contexts and embedding technology in difficult contexts. In addition, she focuses on the role of different education stakeholders in the education reforms process and the implications of that on the manner in which we think about the local implementation of the complex.
